The remarkable.

The remarkable statement is made that ten Yale students have been stricken with appendicitis within a year.

The Little Rock Gazette has got every body mixed up by bringing forward a pronunciation of the name Arkansas. No one but Englishmen or Bosto nians pronounce the word as it is spelled. It was understood that the legislature of the state some years ago officially fixed the pronunciation as Arkansaw. Here comes The Gazette, however, with a poem entitled "My Happy Little Home In Arkansas," in which the final syllable of Arkansas is made to rhyme first with "flow" and then with "below." This indicates that the native pronunciation of the name is not Arkansaw but Arkansow, and we are at sea again. The Arkansawyers or the Arkansowers should settle this matter once for all. It is becoming puzzling and annoying. Perhaps Mr. Opic Read, the Arkansaw Traveler, could put an end to the dispute.-Chicago Herald.

The Right Kind.

The following story, told of the late Senator Stanford, is characteristic of the nan. He was always a cheerful giver, but preferred paying for work to emptying his purse. One day he found a dilapidated cab on the avenue, with a half clad man upon the seat. "Why are you standing here in the cold?" "I s'pects it's 'cause I'ze got toe shabby, sir," said the man. "Do you believe that horse could carry me to the capi-tol?" inquired Stanford. "Yes, sir."

"Try it, then," was the response. And all that winter the man who owned the finest horses in America jogged along behind the rusty steed. That there was a change in that poor driver's fortunes by the spring everybody knew.—Ram's Horn.
